IN MEMORIAM

Captain V. C. Va. Agnew

With the deepest regret we have to record the death of our Partner, VICTOR CHARLES WALTER AGNEW, who passed away on 4th September 1929.

Charles Agnew, who was the son of the late Walter Agnew, a former Partner in Christie's, entered our firm in 1914. On the outbreak of War he proceeded to the Front with his Regiment, The Suffolk Yeomanry, and rendered distinguished services in the field in France and Palestine.

His untimely death is deeply mourned not only by his Partners and the Staff of our firm but by all who knew him as a true friend, a keen sportsman, and an English gentleman.

FOREWORD

THE kindly welcome extended to our Review of 1928 has emboldened us to publish a similar volume recording the chief events of the Season that has just terminated.

Although the Holford sale of last year remains unbeaten as the World's record for a single day's sale of Pictures the Season of 1929 has produced a series of remarkable sales of Works of Art.

The merit of the sales this season has been the high standard of prices that has been steadily maintained from beginning to end of the catalogues, but it is unnecessary for us to write at this juncture upon these matters as we are again indebted to "that Pepys of Art Sales" Mr. A. C. R. Carter for a most admirable review of the sales that have taken place during the last twelve months. Mr. Carter's treatises on these recent art sales will, we are sure, prove of the greatest interest to Connoisseurs at the present day, and we venture to think that in the years to come they will be of considerable historical importance to those Collectors and Connoisseurs who follow the movements and fashions in art. We should like to take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of Mr. Carter's scholarly review, and to offer him our sincere and cordial thanks for his assistance.

The President of the Royal Academy, Sir William Llewellyn, has honoured us this year by designing a most attractive Picture for the decoration of our cover, and we are deeply grateful to him for this delightful addition to our volume.

Our publication has been founded on similar lines to the "Christies 1928," and we have to express our gratitude to all the private Collectors, Connoisseurs, and Members of the Fine Art Trade who have so very kindly given us permission to reproduce the important Works of Art that they have purchased at our sales.

No doubt many of our friends may recognize that some important works of art that have passed through hands this season are not reproduced in this volume. These omissions are in deference to the wishes of one or two of our clients who for particular reasons or in a special circumstance desired to remain anonymous.

In conclusion we should like to record our appreciation of the excellent work of Mr. A. C. Cooper from whose photographs, with very few exceptions, our illustrations have been made.

PICTURE SALES OF 1928-9

By A. C. R. CARTER

I

HEN the Psalmist avowed that his heart was inditing a good matter and that his tongue was the pen of a ready writer he was full of that gusto which a theme of beauty always inspires. For this reason the chronicler, re-surveying in his mind's eye the picturesque procession of rare and beautiful treasures of art passing through the halls of Christie's since the first of these annual issues was published, finds himself replete with stirring memories of another wonderful year's activities.

From beginning to end the season of 1928-9 marched, pari passu, to success. There were very few dull days. Sale followed sale with renewed interest and zest and, when the total of picture sales came finally to be reckoned, it was found that it had surpassed that of any previous year at Christie's, and, therefore, any maximum ever achieved by any art sale-room in the world. In attaining this striking result, the programme of events had not to rely on the recurrence of a miracle. There was no picture sale in the past twelve months, covered by this second report, to match that abnormal Holford dispersal on May 17-18, 1928, yielding the extraordinary aggregate of £416,414, towards which over £364,000 was contributed in the first day's sale; yet such was the sustained influx of varied and valuable art properties that an unprecedented grand total was won.

In measuring this achievement I count the events which happened in the season before Christmas 1928 to be of exceptional importance. Indeed, the series of first-class sales which then occurred came as a complete vindication of some pointed comments which I made last year upon the preferences and prejudices of owners and trustees as to the time of the year when a classic collection should be offered for sale at Christie's. The gist of my argument was that, without the fact being disputed that an art sale held in the height of the season has a glamour and a réclame associated with the high traditions of King Street, there are still other periods in the sale year quite as favourable for a successful issue.

I stressed especially "the little season before Christmas" as being one of those opportune times, and I adduced the memorable precedent which was made in November, ten years ago, when the second Hamilton Palace sale of family portraits, furniture, and silver amassed over £200,000 at Christie's, followed in the same month by the £96,000 dispersal of the Vernon Wentworth portraits and furniture, and by the Sassoon objects of art and tapestries bringing nearly £40,000.

Π

This roseate reminder of the possibilities of a winter season undoubtedly had an effect upon thoughtful owners and trustees of fine possessions, and it was my reward to view the dénouement with the calm satisfaction of a prophet. But the most sanguine augur could not have expected such a sequence of sale successes as ensued before Christmas last year. Farmers have been known to pray for rain and then to be drenched. Similarly, Christie's cellars began to be flooded—with treasures—by the end of November. At the end of the first week after the resumption of the picture traffick, the harbinger of good fortune was found—the omen which signified that the market would be passing from strength to strength. The allusion is to the sale on November 23, 1928 of pictures sent from many and diverse sources—of the kind which, forty years ago, would have been considered well sold at a total of £1,000. Yet the total came to over £13,000 for these "bread-and-butter" lots. Moreover an old panel sent by a Sussex squire fetched as much as 1,700 guineas, greatly to his surprise and elation. Skilful cataloguing is now acknowledged to be one of the fine arts, and when Mr. Alec Martin examined this panel he recognized in it a marked affinity to the technique of that uncommon Flemish Primitive known as "The Master of the Half-Lengths"; one of whose small portraits hangs in the National Gallery, forming part of the collection garnered by the prescient Prince Consort, and presented to the nation in 1863 by Queen Victoria, in fulfilment of his wishes.

The eagerness of professional collectors to replenish their stocks after the summer season was further manifested when a speculative Cuyp-like panel, sent from Plympton by Admiral Bainbridge, raced to 1,500 guineas; and that the market was on the watch for any sporting pictures of merit was proved thus early when a pair of trout-fishing and pheasant-shooting subjects by the oncedespised journeyman painter, Dean Wolstenholme, brought 900 guineas. Another sign of keenness in this November sale was the bid of 680 guineas for a flower-piece by the comparatively unknown seventeenth-century Spanish artist, Pedro de Castro. Henceforward the winter season was destined to be remarkable in the annals of Christie's, and those who now truly say that it went off "with a bang" may recall that, in this early sale, was a picture of that famous explosion at Delft in 1654 wherein that rare and gifted master, Carel Fabritius, lost his life.

TII

So much for omens and harbingers: now for the fulfilment. In my native county they say that money talks, and there is a consensus of opinion among all political partisans in this country that a Yorkshire Chancellor of the Exchequer has been recently causing cash to be very vocal. Let figures speak then! Such was the volume of sales at Christie's in the first week of December that over a quarter of a million sterling was amassed, towards which a sale of jewels totalling over £,188,000 aided largely. In their appropriate sections I shall deal with the varied dispersals which produced this mammoth result. Suffice it now to proceed with the pictorial side, and, in passing, one should allude (in view of the general dearth of contemporary art at auction) to the favourable reception given to Mr. W. Richard Sickert's Cicely on November 30. In reaching 660 guineas this characteristic work by the wittiest associate of the Royal Academy made a sale room maximum for him, and I feel that special mention of it should be recorded because it throws into relief the "good old times" when collectors literally fell over each other to bid in their thousands for the best-sellers of Burlington House. It is pertinent, too, here to recall the remarkable fact that later, on March 1, we had the spectacle of the last bid for a huge canvas by Rosa Bonheur, being only 46 guineas, yet this was the identical picture to which I referred as having brought 4,200 guineas in 1888, when commenting in the previous report on the taste of collectors forty years ago.

IV

Although, as stated, the first week's proceedings in December yielded over £250,000, the picture sale on December 7 was accountable for only a modest portion of this—£22,000—yet it must be regarded as the true forerunner of the dispersal on the following Friday, December 14, which will be remembered for many years to come. Before devoting a special chapter to this I should dwell on certain interesting features of the sale on December 7. In the first place it brought into prominence once more the foresight of the Prince Consort, to which allusion has been already made, for again Mr. Alec Martin had come to the conclusion that a somewhat begrimed picture of a Madonna and Child, which had been sent to Christie's by the legatee of an old rector, was by the hand of that early Netherlandish painter, Bernaert van Orley, represented in the National Gallery, by one of the twenty Primitive works shrewdly collected by the Prince in days when very few people in this country cared a rap for such art. As, two days before the sale, I had written an article in the journal with which I am associated, upon the Prince Consort's flair and devotion, to which scant justice had been paid. I was greatly interested when this old parson's picture realized 1,250 guineas, recalling the fact that in Lord Northwick's sale in 1858, the art of these Primitives was so little understood and less appreciated that the fourth Marquis of Lansdowne was able to pick up a Van Orley Madonna for the bagatelle of 13 guineas.

The sale included also a few pictures and drawings belonging to the late Marquis of Lincolnshire (the sale of whose furniture will be duly noted in its proper place) and it was piquant to see three clever Rowlandson drawings, which used to be valued at a guinea apiece, total 460 guineas. Although the Marquis's Opie portrait of Lady Musgrave was not in the class of that fine picture of a young man reading which fetched as much as 3,000 guineas in the Holford sale (having cost only $15\frac{1}{2}$ guineas in 1867) it afforded an instance of the general advance in values of the "Cornish Wonder's" portraiture. Only three years before, the Marquis had walked into Christie's to inspect the pictures sent for sale by his old friend, Sir Richard Musgrave, and as he liked this Opie Musgrave, he instructed his agent to buy it. The price then paid was the very moderate sum of 22 guineas compared with the 310 guineas given on December 7.

The atmosphere was now charged with emulativeness and eagerness, and the market was therefore on its toes in the expectancy of seeing a collection of the first rank put up for open competition. Ardent bidders had not long to wait, for immediately after the December 7 pictures had gone, Mr. Lance Hannen and his able staff proceeded to hang the famous Tatton Turners and Canalettos sent from Preston. It is just to state, in this connexion, that the senior partner of Christie's does not merely look on or superintend on these occasions. As an old Cambridge Blue he still believes in team work and insists on shifting a heavy picture with the best of his men. As usual, every picture and drawing could be seen tastefully hung by midday on Saturday—an object-lesson in itself to both amateur and professional picture-hangers.

The view-days which followed before the memorable dispersal on December 14, gave opportunities to thousands of admiring visitors, many of whom could never have seen such an array of precious Turner drawings in pristine preservation; such a quartet of early and powerful Canalettos; or such a grandiose Zoffany group which was among the other properties included in a dispersal destined to bring the extraordinary aggregate of £145,745. I have rarely known such anticipatory excitement and interest to be displayed, and, on all sides it was shown that "given the goods" (as a veteran dealer put it) the so-called "season" did not matter a single iota. Unquestionably every frequenter of Christie's was agog: the scene was set for a classic dispersal.

VI

When Mr. Lance Hannen mounted the rostrum on December 14 he saw before him one of the most crowded audiences of his career and, as the first half-hour had to be devoted to the Turner drawings, he must have thought of many celebrated sales in which Turner had won posthumous triumphs.1 The continuous championing of Turner's pictures and drawings at auction by the Agnew family forms a very proud chapter of achievement. As their first Turner purchase at Christie's was in 1859 (eight years after the death of the great painter), the period of the Turner-Agnew association has now reached seventy years, and it is doubtful whether it can be matched by any analogous record in the chronicles of art sales. Many instances of the Agnew ardour could be cited. Suffice it to mention an outstanding example. In the Bullock sale, 1870, the late Sir (then Mr.) William Agnew gave 2,560 guineas for that celestial vision of Venetian sunshine, the picture of The Dogana and Salute. In the Sir John Fowler sale, 1899, he raised the price to 8,200 guineas. In 1927, one of his grandsons, Mr. Colin Agnew, paid the Turner maximum, 29,000 guineas, for this superb work in the sale of the collection of James Ross of Montreal, once an engine-driver in Aberdeen. Therefore, as Mr. Hannen looked on Mr. Gerald Agnew sitting to his right, he would remember his grandfather, Sir William Agnew, his father Morland, his uncle George, and his cousin Lockett, who used to occupy that chair and bid up manfully for Turner's masterpieces. He would also remember that, despite the great sums given at Christie's for Turner drawings by these Agnews of a bygone day, it was Mr. Gerald Agnew who beat every family record by giving 6,200 guineas in the Drummond sale, 1919, for the beautiful Zürich bought by his grandfather for 1,200 guineas in the Novar Sale, 1878. This was one of the now renowned drawings for which Turner tried hard to obtain 1.000 guineas from Griffith of Norwood in 1842, but in the end had to be content with 800 guineas, that is, 80 guineas apiece. As the magnificent Tatton Turner drawing of The Rigi at Sunset or The Red Rigi was another of the famous ten, and had captivated every Turner lover on the view-days, Mr. Hannen soon divined that Mr. Gerald Agnew had come to fight for it contra mundum in the old style. It was evident, too, that his chief opponent would be a well-known shipowner sitting close by, as this gentleman showed his mettle in winning, at 2,400 guineas, a Lausanne drawing which had been preserved in the old portfolio from W. G. Rawlinson's collection. The Rigi was the thirty-sixth and last Turner in the catalogue, and, as soon as it was placed on the easel, the bidding began at 1,000 guineas, and almost in the time that it takes to write this sentence, Mr. Gerald Agnew had beaten the shipowner at the maximum Turner drawing price of 7,900 guineas.

I remember this selfsame drawing falling to the bid of Lockett Agnew at 2,000 guineas in the Taylor sale, 1912, and I remember, too, an old curmudgeon stigmatizing the price as "mad." Let us hope that he is now having many a pleasant chat in the Elysian Fields with Turner-and with Lockett Agnew. He should, too, meet that eminent business man and statesman, the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, truly a real worshipper of Turner for, many years ago, seeking a sure distraction from affairs, he asked "Old Woods" of Christie's to pick for him half a dozen Turner drawings. He always kept the soothing six in a portfolio, and it was his wont to contemplate them in quietude. At his death they were found in his house-still in the portfolio-and Lockett Agnew (who told me the story) bought them, eventually letting old Sir Joseph Beecham have them. At the Beecham sale, 1917, the precious six brought the "mad" total of 14,850 guineas. About the time that Mr. Smith bought these six Turners, he also gave 4,200 guineas for that Rosa Bonheur picture which I have mentioned already as realizing only 46 guineas last season.

This Tatton collection, which caused this furore on December 7, was formed in the last century by the owner's forbear, Robert Townley Parker and, when the 36 drawings and 27 pictures constituting it had been sold, the total for this alone came to £112,927—an average of nearly £1,800 a lot. The average for the twenty-seven pictures was as much as £3,300, and as the highest bid was 12,500 guineas given on two occasions, first for the Reynolds portrait of Anne, Viscountess Townshend, and second, for a small Vandyck portrait of a Genoese Officer, it will be gathered that the allround bidding was unusually high.

A very interesting theory concerning this Reynolds picture has been propounded. Up to its appearance at Christie's it was always held that, although the "original" portrait could never be discovered, this Townley Parker version was only a replica. But at the time of sale documentary evidence was produced which established this portrait to be really the lost original. It is certain that it was acquired about fifty years ago from a descendant of the Lady Townshend portrayed in somewhat secretive circumstances. As for the Vandyck bringing also 12,500 guineas, this had been acquired in 1823 from a collection in Madrid at a frugal sum. The portrait was now bought by Messrs. Vicars, acting for the owner of many telling Vandycks.

Notwithstanding these, the company found the chief attraction to lie in the superb set of Canalettos, proved by accompanying documents to have been painted in 1725-6 for Signor Conti of Lucca for 90 sequins (about £45). As the quartet realized 24,500 guineas, the highest price being 6,400 guineas, given by Messrs. Colnaghi for The Rialto, and the second, 6,300 guineas, paid by the Savile Gallery for the Church of SS. Giovanni e Paolo, every previous Canaletto auction figure was surpassed. In days to come I am convinced that many art lovers will talk proudly of having had the privilege of seeing these magnificent masterpieces, about which there could be no possible doubt whatever as being by the master in his young strength and vision.

VIII

One of the surprises was the courageous bid by Mr. Frank Sabin of 7,200 guineas for Titian's portrait of Daniello Barbaro, which, in less appreciative times, had brought only 38 guineas in the Tarral sale, 1847, and 60 guineas in the Beauclerk dispersal, 1877. I mention this as illustrating the Sibylline process now governing picture valuations. Year by year the number of works of the first rank becomes more depleted owing to their absorption by national and public institutions, so that the market keenly awaits every available opportunity. In addition to the Tatton Turner drawings, there was an early work in oils, Bonneville, Savoy, with a view of Mont Blanc in the distance. This had been bought as recently as 1919 in the Camperdown sale at 3,600 guineas, but the price advanced to 5,800 guineas. When Ruskin saw the sketch for this he declared that mountains had never been drawn before at all, and would never be drawn so well again.

As much will have to be written about the sporting pictures of the year, reference should be made here to a very remarkable panoramic view of Newmarket Heath, done about two centuries ago by that painting Father of the Turf, John Wootton, which was also one of the Tatton pictures. This was bought at 2,000 guineas by Mr. Fred Banks, on behalf of Lord Woolavington, who now possesses quite the finest private collection of sporting pictures in the world, even if some ardent collectors in America are endeavouring to outstrip him.

IX

If the Tatton collection has been treated at some length it is because I desire to stress the fact that fine pictures will bring their full value at Christie's in the winter season, and that it is quite unnecessary for owners to wait for a date in the summer, when there may be even a risk of finding a suitable time in an over-crowded programme.¹ This December sale proved, too, that Zoffany, whose auction apotheosis had seemed imminent in the previous season, found every worshipper ready to acclaim, in terms of high finance, the remarkably picturesque group of The Family of Sir William Young. In reaching 7,000 guineas this masterly composition established a Zoffany maximum (to be equalled later), and although Messrs. Knoedler bought it, one has relief in knowing that the beautiful group now hangs in a Park Lane mansion instead of one in Fifth Avenue. It is one of my dreams that, some day, the National Gallery will possess not only a room filled with picked sporting pictures, but one containing some noble works by Zoffany.

When Mr. Alfred Ellis paid 4,700 guineas last year for the portrait of the Old Berkeley huntsman, Thomas Oldaker, on his favourite mount, by J. Nost Sartorius, all the Old World wondered, yet they were not surprised in America, where they are now prepared to pay Old Master prices for these pictorial records of the sports and pastimes of Old England. In this December sale Sartorius received another welcome, when a pair of scenes painted in 1785 of The Belvoir Hunt (where they still keep three packs of hounds) was bought for 3,100 guineas by Messrs. Ackermann, who have a big clientele in New York. Even a picture of The Old Surrey Staghounds by the almost forgotten William Barraud was potent enough to fetch 1,100 guineas; such is the strength of this modern craze.

The sale included an unusual array of brilliant pastels by John Russell, R.A. (that active Methodist who used to try to convert his sitters and once got into a pretty pother at Cowdray House for his pains), the chief of which were The Persian Sibyl at 780 guineas, and Miss Darby at 720 guineas. There was a piquant auction story concerning a Guardi view of The Guidecca, for which that shrewd discerner, the late Ayherst Buttery, gave 1,950 guineas. It was stated that the lady who had sent it to Christie's had bought it at a country sale for only £8.

Lastly, a lady collector of a century ago was brought to mind when the collection formed by Mrs. Whyte was sold. This astute woman once possessed a portion of the famous predella of Raphael's San Antonio altar-piece, which is now in the Pierpont Morgan collection; her Pietà portion being one of the gems of the Mrs. John Gardner collection in Boston. The chief picture remaining proved to be a Van Goven river-piece which she had picked up in the Duchess of Ancaster's Sale, 1818, for 20 guineas, but, as Van Goyen's pictures are coveted to-day, it went to 1,120 guineas. Such were some of the features of this remarkable December dispersal (and an engaging portrait of a hoyden ascribed to Hazlitt's astute conversationalist, John Northcote, R.A., bringing 2,700 guineas, should not be omitted), but when everybody thought that there would be nothing of importance in the sale, four days before Christmas, the Colnaghis "spotted" a charming little group of a lady and her children relieving a cottager, by William Redmore Bigg, R.A. (1753-1828), and celebrated the centenary of this truthful English painter by bidding up to 2,000 guineas for it. This is the type of old rural picture, of which Wheatley's four delightful glimpses of the life of an eighteenth-century country girl (bought last year for Viscount Bearsted at 8,100 guineas), are such excellent examples, which makes a strong appeal to the American collector, and it was noteworthy that Mr. Dan Farr of Philadelphia was the underbidder.

For some time after the resumption of activities at the end of January, the main interest of collectors was diverted to a very fine sequence of dispersals of noble family silver and furniture, to which descriptive reference will be made later. Picture lovers gleaned that some remarkable treasures would be offered in the timehonoured season but, in the meantime, they found a goodly number of speculative opportunities in the appearance of various tempting canvases and panels. Such an occasion happened on February I when a New Zealand lady had the great satisfaction of finding that Mr. A. de Casseres had beaten the Dutch dealers at 3,000 guineas in the contest for her Salomon van Ruisdael picture of The Ferry, 1644. This elation was the keener because, in 1923, she had submitted the picture before; having placed a somewhat prohibitive reserve upon it in the knowledge that one of this artist's works had brought as much as 1,750 guineas in 1914—then an auction maximum. The incidence of the Dutch Exhibition at Burlington House doubtless affected the market's interest, and continued to do so. Another interesting incident was the success of another of this lady's pictures, a François de Troy garden and fountain scene which reached 2,300 guineas.

It does not necessarily follow that, because a restless—and frugal—collector has filled his house with pictures, his possessions will "turn up trumps" at auction, or later. A man has to have the knowledge or flair of a William Graham, a Charles Butler, or a Robert Benson for this to happen. Therefore a Penarth worthy's houseful of frames, although it had been the talk of the countryside, did not pass muster at Christic's on February 8. Even the total of the pick of these did not exceed £1,650, and the only time when he dipped into the lucky bag, was when he bought a Downman portrait of John Howard, the philanthropist, for 7 guineas in 1925, which brought 135 guineas. Sent by the trustees of the late J. B. Sutherland, a small Raeburn portrait of Mr. Walker of Drumsheugh caused Mr. Buttery to see possibilities in it, and he gave 1,650 guineas to win it.

XII

Forgotten history is often revealed at Christie's, and when Mr. Lance Hannen reached a quaint little panel on February 23 he made the long speech (for him): "We find that this little panel is a portrait of Philip le Beau." The gay young dandy, portrayed by some close associate of Hans Memlinc, was shown wearing the Order of the Golden Fleece, which caused some critics to rush to the conclusion that the portrait was of the founder of the Order, Philip le Bon—the great-grandfather of the sitter. But this anachronism was excelled by another authority who confused Philip le Bon, of Burgundy, with Philip le Bel of France (1268-1314), disregarding the fact that the Order of the Golden Fleece was founded much later, 1430. That shrewd professional collector, Mr. Rothschild, was wise in buying this much-discussed panel at 950 guineas.

I have already alluded to the Rosa Bonheur incident of March 1. It is not fair to the reputation of this painter to ascribe the fall from 4,200 guineas in 1888 to 46 guineas in 1929 for the Labourages Nivernais wholly to a change of taste or fashion. One should mention size as a factor, and, to-day, few people have space for pictures of many square feet in dimension. Public galleries, too, have apparently all the Bonheurs required. Her chef-d'œuvre, the magnificent Horse Fair, cost the Metropolitan Museum in New York £12,000.

Few people to-day remember that highly respected friend and foe of William Agnew—William Vokins—who was a very shrewd and quaint man. He made many telling epigrams and wise sayings, and one was "March is the real month for art sales." The winter season hardly existed in his day or he would probably have prophesied that. He was discerning, however, in discounting the general belief in packing sales into the season at its height. The week ended March 15, for example, contained a £35,000 silver sale, a £57,000 furniture sale, and a sale of pictures unexpectedly totalling £37,700. The latter was not due to the Gabriel collection of pictures of sea-fights, as the day for these has yet to come, but to two little Guardi views of Venice, and to a few Dutch pictures which made a strong appeal to collectors.

Having read about the New Zealand lady's good fortune on February 1 with her 3,000 guineas Salomon van Ruisdael, an Army officer at Dorchester dispatched his Dordrecht panel by the master, and had the delight of finding it to be worth 3,300 guineas. Yet a gentleman in Kent had an even more welcome result as his pair of Guardi Venetian pictures totalled 7,800 guineas, and his Canaletto Grand Canal picture realized 1,900 guineas. The sale contained also a speculative little panel Rembrandt study of an old man, 2,600 guineas, and a Holbein-like portrait, with a coatof-arms, 1,450 guineas. Jan van Goyen's 1647 panel of a view towards Haarlem was much admired by those who had been to Burlington House, and Mr. Alec Martin, acting for a Canadian collector, had to give 2,350 guineas for it.

Richard Wilson's 4,100 guineas River Dee triumph in the Holford sale last year, was bound to have its sequel, as will be shortly shown in dealing with the sale on June 14. In the meantime a gentleman at East Grinstead tried his luck with a Wilson river view, showing Cader Idris in the distance, which had been bought for the then goodly sum of 390 guineas in 1884. This rose to 1,700 guineas. The temper of the market was also evinced when a large Tintoretto theme, which had fetched only 29 guineas in 1917, advanced to 700 guineas, and when a Canaletto view of the Canareggio, estimated at only 56 guineas in 1901, leapt to 620 guineas.

Although such a sportsman and keen judge of the trend of the market as the late Lockett Agnew always maintained that sporting pictures were much undervalued and that their day would come, he really never divined how high and wide those leaps and bounds would be. Else he would not have allowed any rival to buy for a mere 700 guineas Stubbs's mighty portrait of the still mightier Eclipse at the Gilbey sale, Elsenham, in 1915. Gone are the days when pictures of the thrilling joys of the hunting-field could be picked up for a few guineas. For many years such had no "quotation" at Christie's and, as I pointed out last year, not until 1892 did a Sartorius bring 90 guineas at auction.

Without affording the spectacle of huge sums, the sale on April 12 exemplified the eagerness of collectors for any available pictures of this class which cross over to America as regularly as the mails. Thus a little portrait of Sam Dumbleton who, in 1834, was the trusty whipper-in to Dick Knight, the famous huntsman of the Pytchley, painted by J. Ferneley on an off-day, "out of love," realized 340 guineas. I say "out of love" because Ferneley would not be getting more than 20 guineas when painting Sam's lords and masters. Again, too, a portrait of Lord George Bentinck's 1836 St. Leger winner Elis, by the despised Abraham Cooper, R.A. (1787-1868) fetched 550 guineas. The interest of this really well-painted picture is partly historical, because this race-horse was the first to travel in a van, and Cooper took pains to include this as an accessory to the background. Poor old Cooper! In 1859, when he was seventy-two, he had the misfortune to exhibit a picture in the Academy, called The Fusee. Those were the days when there were more libels than libel actions, and the savage Ruskin, enraged at a picture devoted to "the athletic exercise of smoking," went on to state that a man may write R.A. after his name and yet not be able to paint a gutter. In addition to the Ferneley portrait of the whipper-in, three other Ferneleys brought 1,840 guineas between them, and a pair of fox-hunting scenes, 1,120 guineas. No wonder that country squires, confronted with the inexorable demands of taxation, seize the opportunity of selling their pictorial sporting records of happier days.

XIV

In my early days at Christie's I used to see Fantin-Latour's exquisite flower-pieces fetch 20 guineas at the most. Indeed it was not until 1894 that one attained 50 guineas, and one of Mr. W. W. Sampson's experiences was to find, on his arrival in London in 1896, that, after putting three Fantins in his window (almost opposite Christie's) at the price of 20 guineas each, nobody wanted them. Since then there has been many an auction furore and, in 1924, one saw a beautiful rose-subject attain the Fantin maximum, 2,600 guineas. As few have made an appearance since, the example offered in the A. T. Hollingsworth sale, April 19, attracted much notice, and several dealers came over especially from Paris to compete for it, but Messrs. Reid and Lefèvre won at 1,550 guineas.

The late collector owned also one of those ten Turner drawings, for which the artist tried to obtain 100 guineas apiece in 1842, and had to be content with 80 guineas. This Splügen Pass had a special interest in that Ruskin had tried—and failed—to persuade his father to buy it for 80 guineas. Later, in 1878, a band of his friends conceived the very appropriate plan of subscribing 1,000 guineas and buying it for him. On April 19 it realized 1,800 guineas, and would certainly have fetched much more if some of the effects of exposure to sunlight had been less discernible. The collection was eclectic and contained works of the Barbizon and modern Dutch schools, some of which showed depreciation in view of the diminished demand compared with the favour bestowed twenty years ago; but, generally, the property recouped the estate with the original outlay. Again, a Richard Wilson helped with a profit, the view of Tabley House, bought in the Fenton sale 1880 for 67 guineas, advancing to 820 guineas. This and others assisted in redressing some of the fluctuations such as the revaluation at 840 guineas of Corot's Souvenir de Zuydcoote which had realized 1,900 guineas in the Sir Horatio Davies sale, 1903. When this former Lord Mayor of London gave a dinner "in honour of art" over 30 years ago Phil May was one of the guests. To mark the occasion several fine pictures from the Davies Collection were hung in the reception room. This Corot was there, and there was also an especially good picture by the animalier, Van Marcke, which Phil May openly admired. Turning to me he exclaimed: "By Gow, if I could paint cows like that chap, I would chuck up Art and go in for his job!"

XV

The time was now ripe for the advent of the Brownlow pictures, accompanied by a cohort of fine works from diverse collections, sufficient to make up one of Christie's famous catalogues. The sale which ensued on May 3, totalling over £,124,000, was full of incident, and provided the sale maximum of the year when Messrs. I. S. Goldschmidt of Frankfurt gave 17,000 guineas for the Brownlow Vandyck portrait of that seventeenth-century president of the Chamber of Commerce at Brabant, Jacques le Roy. To continue with the Brownlow pictures: the Rembrandt panel of Isaac Refusing Esau His Blessing was bought by Mr. Francis Howard for 8,000 guineas; the small Vandyck portrait of his friend, the French engraver, M. Leclerc, was one of the bargains at 3,200 guineas, and the small Titian A. Navagero, a portrait of a Venetian poet and diplomat, fetched 3,100 guineas. The famous Robert Benson collection of Italian Primitives contained many a picture picked up for the price of a song in the memorable William Graham sale 1886 (a year before my time), and a reminder of this dispersal was a Battista de Dossi scene from Orlando Furioso, which then brought a paltry 22 guineas, but leapt to 3,000 guineas on May 3. Lord Brownlow also sent his well-known Hoppner family portrait of the Cust Brothers which had not been seen in public since it was lent to Birmingham in 1903. It was known that he had been compelled to sell his Belton House silver, furniture, and pictures in order to meet the demand for Death Duties. The Hoppner was included as a sort of last resort in the event of the picture sale total not being sufficient for the balance. As the pictures sold provided the necessary sum this magnificent Hoppner was withdrawn at 10,000 guineas to go back home again.

It would seem that the ladies have most of the luck at Christie's, and another striking instance of this was provided by the appearance of a Rembrandt Portrait of a Warrior belonging to an admiral's wife, whose father had bought it in Newcastle over sixty years ago; the story being that it had once been in an old château in Portugal. This did not cause the lady to build any castle in Spain. She knew that some of her friends, including the late Sir Hugh Lane, had often been puzzled by the picture, but she sent it to Christie's with no exalted idea of its value, and was prepared to be satisfied if it brought the handsome sum of 500 guineas. Indeed she did not feel it necessary to attend the sale, and was out for a walk when the telephone message was sent to her home in Hampshire announcing the joyful tidings that the Rembrandt had brought as much as 15,600 guineas. The professional bidders showed no hesitancy in their belief in the merits of the picture, and the Savile Gallery added it to their many sale-room captures.

XVI

I remember Charles Wertheimer's glee in giving 1,050 guineas, in the Charles Huth sale, 1895, for Morland's Visit to the Child at Nurse, for it then marked this essentially British artist's maximum.

Ten years later, in the Tweedmouth sale, Charles Davis paid 4,000 guineas for the delightful glimpse of the humours of rural life, Dancing Dogs, which Mr. Walter Burns sent for sale on May 3. It would have been a misfortune if this capture of the eternal fun of the fair had left England, and Messrs. Vicars won it for a private collector at home at the worthy price of 8,800 guineas. This beats the Benevolent Sportsman, a much larger picture which fetched 5,200 guineas in the Beecham sale, 1917. When Sir Joseph Beecham bought this for £2,500 he made the characteristic remark that he required a "full-dress" Morland, and was prepared to pay a "full-dress" price for it. Romney's réclame in 1929 was due more to much-discussed incidents outside the auction room, but in this sale on May 3 was one of his poses of Emma as Cassandra, apparently the portrait which was bought by her protector, Charles Greville, for 51 guineas in Alderman Boydell's sale, 1805, and re-sold for 31 guineas in 1810, after Greville's death. An American visitor saw it on the view days and instructed his agent to buy it; the price, 8,500 guineas, being Romney's highest for the year. Lord Stalbridge sent a Moroni portrait of a Nobleman in Armour—just the decorative adjunct for a private armoury—and accordingly Mr. Permain, who buys fine arms and armour on behalf of a wellknown American collector, saw to it that he acquired this well painted work at 3,800 guineas. Such were the salient features of a busy day, to which should be added mention of a characteristic Goya cathedral interior The Sermon at 2,800 guineas; a pair of Wheatley portraits of the Winstanley Wood Family, 2,000 guineas. and of two children of the same family, 2,300 guineas.

XVII

Continuing to treat these picture sales in chronological order, I find that the chief events before the remarkable dispersal of Richard Wilson's pictures on June 14 included another Fantin-Latour flower-piece (sent this time by the gentleman at East Grinstead who owned the 1,700 guineas Wilson sold on March 15), which realized 1,450 guineas—a big advance from its purchase price, 48 guineas, in 1894. Sporting pictures also maintained their hold, and, on June 7, one of hounds in full-cry by Francis Sartorius, father of J. Nost Sartorius, reached 1,500 guineas. For this the painter would receive not more than 20 guineas. When he visited the de la Poles in Devonshire in 1784 he painted a meet, with the delightful ornament of Anne, Lady de la Pole, sitting in her open carriage. This was the lady whose portrait by Romney fetched 39,400 guineas at Christie's in 1913, and 44,000 guineas subsequently in the Michelham sale.

The total of over £,65,000 on June 14 was helped by seventeen beautiful Richard Wilson landscapes bringing £,20,000, and every lover of this great artist's atmospheric charm felt that poetic justice had been done at last when the idyllic Thames at Twickenham attained the Wilson maximum, 6,400 guineas. A generous gift to the nation ensued. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Mark Oliver of the Savile Gallery bought at 900 guineas the Hounslow Heath, and asked Mr. Hannen to state that they desired to present it to the National Gallery. The fine Lake of Nemi realized 3,100 guineas and, as I watched the enthusiastic bidding, my mind went back to the sale at Christie's on April 14, 1888, when I saw twelve Wilson landscapes total the paltry sum of 501 guineas. Wilson's Dutch parallel, Jan van Goyen, to whom reference has already been made, received further honour when a view of Nimeguen attained 3,300 guineas; two others, from the Culling-Eardley collection, bringing 2,550 guineas between them. A very interesting feature of the sale was the appearance of several small Gainsborough portraits of members of the Kilderbee family, one of whom the artist designated in his will "to act as overseer" of his estate. It was to Samuel Kilderbee that Gainsborough, when dying, said: "They must take me altogether—liberal, thoughtless, and dissipated." The Savile Gallery gave 8,800 guineas for the Mrs. Dupuis, and 4,400 guineas for the Mrs. Kilderbee. Mention should also be made of a large picture by Hubert Robert, The Fountain, 2,400 guineas, in view of the fact that, a week later, another work, Roman Buildings, caused the Seligmanns of Paris to bid up to 5,600 guineas.

This sale on June 21 afforded other surprises, and few expected that the Princess Paley's pictures, removed from her late husband's palace, at Tsarskoye Selo, by arrangement between a syndicate and the Russian Government (and with the consent of the Princess Paley), would contain forty-nine capable of totalling over £25,000. The auction success of the Frenchman Robert seemed appropriate, because he had a miraculous escape from the guillotine during the Reign of Terror, another man of the same name being sent to execution in his stead. The Russian palace, too, had housed a delightful Vandyck portrait of Charles II as a young boy, for which Mr. Dudley Tooth gave 4,600 guineas. A small Nattier portrait of a Court lady yielded 3,500 guineas, and a Canaletto view of the Giovanni and Paolo Church in Venice, 1,700 guineas.

XVIII

During the course of the £129,000 sale on June 28 listeners-in throughout the country had the second opportunity of having a picture sale broadcast for them. The first time this occurred was at the end of the Carnarvon sale on May 22, 1925, but, until television is perfected, the scene at Christie's cannot be adequately conveyed. The guiles and wiles, the tricks, the toys, "dissembled with an outward show" by wary bidders, should be seen to be believed. Even then, only the auctioneer can watch the whole game. How many frequenters of Christie's have ever climbed into the rostrum to understand the auctioneer's coign of vantage? Moreover, how can a nod or a flicker of the eyelid be broadcast?

The sale began with Viscount d'Abernon's few pictures offered on account of his vacation of Esher Place, the most alluring of which was Reynolds's quaint portrait of a baby girl archly wearing her mother's cap. This Mob-Cap was bought for the Baroness Burdett-Coutts in the Samuel Rogers sale, 1856, for 780 guineas, and Lord d'Abernon acquired it in her sale, seven years ago, for 2,000 guineas. After much vigorous nodding by Mr. John Major, he won it at 6,000 guineas. Bought originally for frugal sums, a Ghirlandaio Nativity realized 2,100 guineas, and a Mainardi Madonna and Child, 1,900 guineas. The large Reynolds group of Judge Dunning and his Sister, much admired by Millais in his day, found a last bid of 3,800 guineas.

I consider it to be a subject of national regret that no patriotic bidder was found to withstand Mr. Dan Farr of Philadelphia when he won, at 7,000 guineas, that marvellous composition by Zoffany of The Dutton Family, sent by Lord Sherborne, a veritable reflection of eighteenth-century English taste and breeding. How strange it seems that, whereas an Englishman presented an elegant Zoffany to the Berlin Museum in 1908, our National Gallery still lacks an example worthy of a painter comparable with Hogarth. On the view days a slashing full-length cavalier portrait by Vandyck of the Earl of Peterborough was submitted to much close inspection, and it was generally agreed that it was not in such a fine condition as the dominating Abbé Scaglia, which was bought for 30,000 guineas by the present Lord Camrose in the Holford sale last year. Finally it fetched 9,500 guineas, and shortly after the sale, Messrs. Spink dispatched it to be hung in the Tudor Hall of a departmental store in Montreal. Delighting in being dubbed "The Modern Barnum," Mr. Ringling succeeded in winning, at 7,800 guineas, Rembrandt's large Descent from the Cross, belonging to the Comtesse de Behague. When this left the Duke of Abercorn's collection, thirty years ago, it was subjected to much discussion. Mr. Ringling took also at 2,100 guineas a Moroni portrait of General Mario Benvenuto, in shining armour, and the chief Knoedler purchase was an attractive Romney portrait of a boy-officer, William Rumbold, who was present at the taking of Pondicherry in 1778, at the age of eighteen. This realized 8,200 guineas. Another small portrait, Raeburn's Miss Lilias Gampbell, brought 8,000 guineas (1,800 guineas in 1902), and another of fames Edgar, 4,400 guineas (only 350 guineas in 1901). These were in the J. J. Moubray collection from Kinross, another in it being Gainsborough's General Meyrick, 4,400 guineas. various times pictures from the Erle-Drax collection have been sent to Christie's, and on this occasion two reached high figures. Mr. Leopold Davis gave 7,500 guineas for a Giovanni Bellini panel of The Repose in Egypt, which had fetched only 102 guineas in 1859, and for an Assumption by Neri di Bicci, once an altar-piece in the convent of the Florentine Church of the Trinità, the Savile Gallery paid 7,100 guineas. I should mention also that the chief Opie sold in the year, appeared in this sale, a portrait of the Hon. Mary Legge, which realized 2,500 guineas.

On the following Friday, July 5, nearly £40,000 was obtained for a miscellaneous catalogue, and, in the Brauer collection, sent from Nice, was a panel of The Nativity by that very rare associate of the great Bruges painter Gerrard David, Adriaen Isenbrant, who is represented by only one work in the National Gallery, bequeathed by George Salting in 1910. This brought as much as 3,200 guineas, and, in the same collection, was a Frans Hals Laughing Drinker, 5,000 guineas, with a Lorenzetti panel of St. Catherine at 1,800 guineas. Mr. W. W. Sampson bought at 2,600 guineas an unframed Romney portrait of General " Tiger" Duff, and the chief works in the late Harold Bendixon's property were a pair of scenes of high and low life by the younger Tiepolo, which fetched the goodly sum of 1,950 guineas. The Marquis of Linlithgow's two sets of four foxhunting scenes by Henry Alken met with the usual keenness and realized 2,300 guineas.

The Monday picture sale which followed actually totalled nearly £10,000, and Mr. Dan Farr, the winner of the 7,000 guineas Zoffany already mentioned, gave 1,100 guineas for a Cotes portrait of a colonel of the West York Militia. But since a Cotes portrait was bought for the nation at 4,200 guineas in the Holford sale last year, his works can be no longer picked up cheaply.

XIX

When it was known that the Earl of Yarborough had decided to dispose of that portion of his family pictures which had been at Arlington Street for many years, and had been inherited from the Worsley branch of his house, there was much preliminary excitement as few of them had been seen at public exhibitions for some years past. Several of the finest pictures had been removed to the country seat many years ago, but the ubiquitous Dr. Waagen wrote of the collection in its entirety in 1857, and the late Sir Claude Phillips knew it well, but very few of the present generation of connoisseurs could speak of it with first-hand knowledge. As far back as 1875 as many as fourteen out of the collection were lent to Burlington House, including that mighty achievement by Turner, The Wreck of the Minotaur, which quietly departed for America some years ago. The second Yarborough Turner, The Vintage Festival at Macon, a very powerful work, painted when the artist was twenty-eight, was, however, some compensation, and this large picture evoked general admiration. Under the veil of dust and grime of years one could see the promise of that glow which Turner had loved to suggest, and it was not surprising to find the Agnews bidding up to 8,600 guineas for the masterly concept. The curiosity of the quidnuncs was much whetted by the Holbein pair of panels, especially by the child-portrait of Edward VI, a most engaging work which was recognized to be akin to the very fine and authentic version at Hanover. Modern expertise is very ruthless. A work, passed as a Simon Pure Holbein, nemine contradicente, is worth £30,000 to £50,000. I consider this Yarborough panel, therefore, was well sold at 9,500 guineas.

When the National Gallery bought its first Raphael in 1824, a portrait of Pope Julius II, it was regarded as genuine, but subsequent authority has relegated it to an able follower, and the Yarborough portrait of this Pope's intaglio carver, Ambrosia Caradosso, in bringing 2,000 guineas, was treated as a school picture. A Titian Magdalen passed muster at 4,400 guineas, and a Tintoretto Pietà, if not convincingly the work formerly in the Orleans Gallery, received the worthy valuation of 3,500 guineas from the Savile Gallery. Despite the fact that many of the Old Masters in this portion of Lord Yarborough's collection were appraised moderately, the sale totalled over £63,000. It was heartening to witness another bout of enthusiastic bidding for a pair of works by Zoffany, painted when he was under the patronage of Garrick, who was the first to discern his talents when he was devilling for Benjamin Wilson. One of Garrick's best rôles was in the title-part of The Farmer's Return from London, in which he recounts the wonders of the metropolis. In the sale of Mrs. Garrick's pictures in 1823 this brought only 32 guineas, but it was increased more than a hundred-fold by Messrs. Amor's bid of 3,400 guineas. The second stage picture by Zoffany, Love in a Village, showing Shuter, the Toole of his day, in full humour, realized 1,700 guineas, compared with only 30 guineas in the Garle sale, 1862.

XX

A full-blooded appreciation of the art of our most highly gifted horse-painter, George Stubbs, A.R.A. (1724-1806) was to follow. It happened in the picture sale on July 19, and the picture, which caused the Knoedlers to go to 4,200 guineas in order to win it, had been sent by Colonel E. F. Hall of Romsey. The work was not of the type of the artist's celebrated Eclipse (which has gone to America at a price which would buy a classic Derby winner for the stud), but was a delightful glimpse of a village green, of a country church, and of a cosy inn, with two jolly huntsmen and a favourite hound just on the point of setting out for the meet. When I look upon a happy memory of Sweet Auburn such as this, I feel that the great Dutch masters who painted their own beloved country life, did not surpass some of these old English sporting themes. They make a call to the blood and, even if they are going to America, they will do as much good in re-creating a bond of relationship as any masterpieces of Elizabethan literature. In the same sale were two scenes by J. N. Sartorius, depicting the Beaufort Hunt in breaking cover and in full cry on that day in 1817 when the hunt was invited to hunt over the country at Stow-in-the-Wold, and these realized 2,900 guineas. Even the view of an old livery stable —a picture by George Morland's brother-in-law, James Ward, R.A.—was worth 1,150 guineas, and in a sale, totalling over £32,000, there were fox-hunting scenes bringing over 500 guineas which, twenty years ago, would not have fetched 50 guineas.

A unique event in auction annals was the appearance of a portrait by Marc Gheeraedts accompanied by the actual costume of the sitter portrayed. I believe that there are instances in foreign galleries of a picture and the complementary robe being displayed, but I cannot recall a precedent at Christie's. The costumes of famous portraits are sometimes sold separately as, for example, the precise dress used by Sargent's Carmençita. I know this because I bought it myself in the Sargent sale. To avoid inquiries let me add that I gave it away to a very well-known private collector. This Gheeraedts portrait belonged to Major-General Sir John Headlam, and it depicted an ancestress who was the wife of a Stuart Yeoman of the Jewel House. A portrait by this Bruges painter, who died in London in 1635, was mentioned in last year's report as realizing 1,000 guineas in the Grey sale, but this was much exceeded by the Knoedlers' bid of 4,000 guineas. Unquestionably a good picture, this Headlam portrait's value was much enhanced by the beautifully embroidered tunic of arabesque design, and had been much admired when shown at the Lansdowne House exhibition earlier. Portrait and costume have since joined an English private collection. Another auction tribute was paid also to the art of Guardi when Mr. Frank Sabin gave 3,100 guineas for a small view of the Island of San Giorgio Maggiore. Colonel Carruthers of Dormont, who owned it, would be aware that his grandfather paid only 56 guineas for it in the Stewart sale, 1839.

XXI

In an ordinary year the market would have been exhibiting some signs of fatigue towards the end, but the doughty fighters of auction showed none whatever, and literally came up smiling for the penultimate round on July 26. The collection of the late Sydney Morse was awaited with zest by the admirers of the mystic art of William Blake, and even greater sums—in proportion—were obtained than those in the remarkable Linnell dispersal at Christie's in 1918. The imagination of Blake who, even when a child, explained his truancy by saying that he had been watching a tree filled with angels, may be still caviare to the general, yet there are enough worshippers to fire the sale-room with enthusiasm. Three of his drawings then accounted for as much as 4,700 guineas. The one inspired by Shakespeare's fantasy of Queen Katharine's Dream brought 1,850 guineas, and Mr. Gabriel Wells of New York gave 1,800 guineas for The Devil Rebuked, for the subject of which Blake had gone to that chapter in Deuteronomy describing the burial of Moses.

A few pictures belonging to the late Lord Revelstoke contained two examples proving that collectors are determined to find market successors to the more famous eighteenth-century portrait-painters. We saw illustrative instances of this last year in the promotion of Cotes, Opie, and others. It was now the turn of Nathaniel Hone, R.A., and that parson-Academician, the Rev. M. W. Peters, R.A. Hone in his day contrived to enanger Reynolds whom he had caricatured. He was charged, too, with attacking Angelica Kauffman with his brush and, to vindicate himself, he held an exhibition in 1776 which was probably the first one-man-show in the annals of British art. The engaging portrait of Mrs. Anastasia Blake-Forster, of kit-cat size, painted in 1776, which educed the final bid of 2,800 guineas, and therefore a Hone maximum, is obviously a meritorious performance and will renew interest in the painter's works. When Lord Revelstoke bought it in 1911 the market was somewhat surprised at the "high" price of 1,050 guineas, but we shall probably witness further advances.

Twenty-six years ago I took occasion to remark, when a portrait by Peters had brought 340 guineas, that the parson-painter was not famous for his drawings of Luther and Melancthon, but for his swooning types of youth and beauty. One saw such a work bring 1,450 guineas in 1913 when Lockett Agnew bought the tender Lydia, and my prophecy in 1903 of Peters' subsequent success was partly fulfilled. Lord Revelstoke's Young Lady Reading, however, was a better illustration, as it realized 1,800 guineas. I felt that I had seen this winsome portrait before and, on refreshing my memory, I find that it is the picture which brought 820 guineas on May 19, 1911—the day on which the late Louis Duveen, acting for his brother, gave 22,300 guineas for Raeburn's Mrs. Robertson-Williamson.

XXII

When the cheerful company faced Mr. Gordon Hannen on August 1 to indulge in the auction delights of the last sale of the season, they found a sale-menu of the unusual length of 221 courses, yet few flinched from the attack. A note of buoyancy was still in the air, and it was clear that any final opportunities would be seized with zest. Collectors soon got into their stride, and when Major Bertram Hardy's pictures from Burton-on-Trent were reached, there was a tally-ho of bidding for a pair of Sam Alken's lusty fox-hunting scenes, Messrs. Vicars being in at the death with 1,350 guineas. Next followed more appreciation of the art of Canaletto, as the Savile Gallery, which had been prominent in the great Tatton sale in December, did not overlook the merits of The Arsenal at Venice and The Piazzetta of St. Mark's, for which they bade up manfully and paid readily 5,400 guineas.

There were, naturally, in such a protracted sale, a few longueurs as the more modest properties were reached, but sparkling incidents leavened the proceedings. Every frequenter of Christie's seems agreed to-day that interest in the art of Romney never abates. It does not follow that every season a 58,000 guineas Mrs. Davenport will emerge, but the market finds contentment in less striking achievements. The romance of Emma is quite the liveliest motif in the history of art sales, and any portrait of this wayward enchantress finds a crowd of admirers or worshippers. In this Burton-on Trent collection, for example, there was one of Romney's poses of her as Cassandra, not so tragic in intenseness as the version which the American visitor to Christie's bought for 8,500 guineas on May 3. On that occasion, it may be now mentioned, Mr. Alec Martin was the underbidder, acting for one of Emma's votaries in the country place in Wales near which Emma, as a demure young girl of fifteen, began her busy life as a nursemaid. This country admirer, determined to possess a portrait of her, therefore had his ambition satisfied—at an outlay of 3,000 guineas. When the portrait was bought originally at Christie's on June 15, 1861, the price was only 180 guineas, despite the cataloguer's enthusiastic—and unusual note: "In this the painter has thrown the sublimest expression and highest fascination." Yet, sixty-eight years ago, 180 guineas was a very high sum for a Romney, and, in view of the fact that there are now sale-records proving that four pictures by Romney have amassed the amazing auction aggregate of 194,000 guineas, it seems strange to state that, not until 1882, did a Romney portrait top 1,000 guineas at Christie's.

XXIII

In the previous report I stated that the lure of Christie's is one of the magnetic forces of the world, and mentioned that at a sale many years ago, I espied three famous men destined to be Prime Ministers, Lord Rosebery, Mr. Arthur Balfour, and Mr. Asquith. To-day it is common knowledge that Mr. Ramsav MacDonald visits Christic's as often as the cares of State allow him to take "an hour off." Therefore I find it especially pertinent to discover from some fascinating letters recently published in The Daily Telegraph, that Disraeli, as First Lord of the Treasury in 1874, visited Christie's with admirable results, because after inspecting the Alexander Barker collection he instructed the Director of the National Gallery (Frederick W. Burton) to buy some of the masterpieces, one of which was the luminous Nativity, by Piero della Francesca, at 2,300 guineas, worth at least £,100,000 to-day. Disraeli's words: "I mean to rise early to-morrow and go to Christie's " are well worth remembering.1

¹ Another Disraeli association with Christie's is to be found in the picture by J. Gebaud, preserved at King Street, of the scene in the Carysfort sale, June 14, 1828, when Sir Robert Peel (then Home Secretary in the Duke of Wellington's administration) bought Reynolds's Snake in the Grass, now in the National Gallery, for 1,200 guineas, as among the distinguished and interesting company portrayed is the statesman's father, Isaac.

THE TEMPLE DIAMONDS SOLD FOR $\mathcal{L}9,940$

JEWEL SALES

By A. C. R. CARTER

ID you ever see a jewel sale in which ten consecutive lots—contained on a single page of a Christie's catalogue—totalled £125,500? "I can imagine this question being put, some years hence, by those who remember that dazzling dispersal on December 5, 1928, when the aggregate of the most remarkable sale of jewels ever held at Christie's came to over £188,000. As I have already stated in my descriptive notice of the year's picture sales, this event was the prime factor in bringing a total of a quarter of a million sterling in a single week at Christie's, and that it was followed by a series of other sales which combined to put on record a very striking chain of achievement in the little season before Christmas. Henceforward let no man dare to say that only the height of the season is the fortunate period for attracting collectors to come in a coûte que coûte spirit of abandon to Christie's.

In the previous report I took occasion to point out the historical fact that, although Christie's long records contain many famous jewel sales associated with France, such as the dispersal of the Du Barry's jewels in 1795 after her execution, and of the Empress Eugénie's casket in 1872, after her flight, the real ascendancy of London—and therefore Christie's—over Paris was not established until 1901. The additional taxation on the business of the commis- saire-priseur had the effect of transferring much business to the free and open market in London, and it was marked by the appearance at Christie's on July 9, 1901, of the pearl necklace once the possession of the notorious Madame Humbert, which then realized $f_{120,000}$.

Many rich pearl necklaces have been sold since. Madame de Falbe's necklace of 51 beautifully matched pearls brought £47,500 on July 18, 1918. In the following year three were sold for £41,500, £33,200, and £29,000. Again, on May 12, 1920, a rope of 188 pearls fetched £54,500. With these in mind the company on December 5, 1928, wondered whether that superb necklace of 79 carefully matched and rare pearls, with a very fine snap of an oblong emerald, would disturb any previous maximum. This and other prizes were on that single page which I have mentioned, and were known to have comprised the casket of a very well-known lady, whose identity, however, was not revealed, Christie's having been asked to respect her anonymity. Incidentally it may be mentioned that, during the sale, the ex-Queen of Greece sat behind the rostrum of Captain Charles Agnew, the auctioneer who, in the end, had the distinction of presiding over a jewel dispersal surpassing any ever conducted either by his late father, Mr. Walter Agnew, or by Mr. William Anderson, now retired, who had the privilege of selling the £,54,500 necklace in 1920.

The competition which ensued was international from the opening bid of £10,000; the final bout of bidding being a duel between England and France, as represented by Messrs. Jerwood & Ward of London and Messrs. Van Cleef & Arpels of Paris. The former had the victorious call at £45,000. Two Paris dealers, M. Fischof and M. Founès, fought it out for a string of only 12 pearl which the former won at 18,000 guineas; and immediately afterwards a string of 61 pearls brought £14,500. Yet, despite these huge sums, many considered that the most wonderful gem in the collection was a single large navette-shaped brilliant, mounted as a ring, which was annexed by the Paris underbidders for the £45,000 pearl necklace at the surprising bid of £,14,200. A threerow necklace of 293 pearls made £8,000 (Drayson); another of 87 pearls, £7,500 (Weisz), and, to complete that single page of ten lots accounting for $f_{0.125,500}$, mention should be added of Messrs. Jerwood & Ward's purchases of a pendant, formed with a large hexagonal brilliant suspended from a knot-of-riband loop, £7,500; of a £4,600 emerald and brilliant ring; and of a £3,200 emerald and brilliant brooch; a pearl and brilliant bar brooch reaching £3,000. Seven more lots in this anonymous lady's casket brought £13,220; Messrs. Jerwood & Ward giving £3,500 for an emerald ring, and Mr. S. H. Harris, £2,600 for another ring.

I remember the sale-room talk when Mrs. Lewis-Hill's emerald and brilliant brooch realized £4,500 in 1907. On December 5 Lady Rachel Verney sent her brooch, with a large central emerald bordered by 16 Indian table diamonds. It had descended to her from that Lord Amherst of Arracan who was Governor-General between 1823 and 1828. This surpassed the Lewis-Hill price in bringing £4,700 (Weil). Many other lots yielded over £1,000 each; among Mrs. Mellin's jewels being a pearl and brilliant brooch, £3,250 (Drayson). Mrs. Charles Hay's pearl collar of nine rows fetched £2,050 (Weil), and at the end of the sale as much as £5,500 was paid by Messrs. Liebman for a brilliant and sapphire band-bracelet; and a sapphire and brilliant pendant and neckchain went for £5,600. The late Dame Ellen Terry's sale of her "few things" on December 19 was pathetic by contrast, as the highest price was only f,49 for a single-brilliant ring. In Victorian days "another great actress loses her jewels" was a frequent headline in newspapers, but this dear lady never had any of importance to lose. In 1920 Miss Terry had a modest sale at Christie's of her chief possessions; the total being £965 8s. 6d., towards which her emerald and brilliant pendant contributed £400.1 On the other hand, Phyllis Broughton's casket (including a £5,000 emerald and brilliant bracelet) made over £36,000 at Christie's in 1927, and I recollect a sale of a few of Mrs. Langtry's adornments realizing f,4,841 in 1904. Yet the possession of a few trinkets does not, fortunately, make the reputation of an actress already blessed with the priceless jewel of her art; and when one thinks of the rare gifts bestowed by nature and art upon Ellen Terry, one recalls Hazlitt's dignified eulogy of the Siddons: "She was the stateliest ornament of the public mind." Even if the sale-room appears, at first sight, to have little to add to Ellen Terry's fame, there was a triumph for her, twenty-three years ago in the Irving sale at Christie's, when the first Sir Joseph Duveen, with fine prevision, bought Sargent's majestic portrait of her as Lady Macbeth, and gave it to the nation. I know that his father's benefaction inspired the present Sir Joseph Duveen to provide that fine Sargent gallery at Millbank, in which this first gift and others which have ensued might be appropriately displayed.

The jewel sale on February 13 contained a pearl and brilliant tiara, inherited by Captain the Hon. Marcus Pelham, which fetched £1,360 (Weisz); and in the sale on April 17 Mr. S. H. Harris gave £6,100 for a three-row necklace of 163 pearls; another rope of 131 pearls bringing £4,100 (Drayson) in a £25,000 sale. Rose Day has become worthily associated with Christie's and, on June 12, 1929, it was observed with considerable enthusiasm; over £2,000 being again raised by the sale of the Queen's two bouquets, offered rose by rose in the two rooms where dispersals were being conducted by Mr. Gordon Hannen and Mr. Terence McKenna.

The bonne bouche of this important jewel sale, which provided a gross total of over £113,000, was a dazzling emerald and brilliant tiara which had been originally presented to the Hon. Mrs. Meynell Ingram, of Temple Newsome, as a wedding gift, by her aunt, Mrs. Beckett, of the famous family of bankers. It caused a very eager contest, and the wary winner at £17,000 elected to choose the nom de vente of "Mrs. James." Another attractive prize was a necklace of 55 pearls at £18,800, and M. Fischof of Paris took another necklace of 73 pearls at £9,000.

The Temple family diamonds, which had a long pedigree going back to the wife of Richard, Earl Temple, Lady Anne Brydges (who was sole heiress of the third and last Duke of Chandos), and descending to the Baroness Kinloss, were also sold; the chief relic being a necklace of 11 oval chain-pattern links with a large centre stone, realizing £3,300 (Janesich). The Duchess of Leeds' diamond head-ornament was also sold for £1,280 to this buyer, and her Latin Cross pendant of 16 brilliants brought £1,000 (S. H. Harris). Typical of other lots was a lady's necklace of 65 pearls for which Mr. Drayson gave £4,000. Even the concluding sale of the season on July 10 brought over £,10,000, although consisting of unpretentious jewels. Lastly, it is important for owners of necklaces carefully to bear in mind that the reproductions given later are of smaller size than the actual pearls or stones composing the necklaces sold. It is necessary to stress this fact as owners might otherwise feel that they were possessing strings of pearls comparable with the finest.

SILVER SALES

By A. C. R. CARTER

N essaying the task of describing the mass of silver treasures which appeared during the past season at Christie's, the writer runs the risk of Achan—that of being overwhelmed by his subject. For in weight and rarity of precious metal even that remarkable year 1924, when the celebrated Swaythling collection was dispersed, was surpassed. By this I do not wish to convey the deduction that any piece in 1928-9 disturbed the paramountcy of that 1500 Tudor cup which was bought in the Swaythling sale by Mr. Lionel Crichton for £10,000 on behalf of the Victoria and Albert Museum (having once cost only £50 and then having being sold to help a church to buy new Communion plate); but when I make a conspectus of the chief events I find that upwards of 170 examples fetched 200s. an oz. or over, or £200 or over when vessels were submitted at the "all-at" scale of bidding.

Arch-frequenters of Christie's (whom Rabelais would have styled archimarmitonerastiques, which, in turn, the prophetic Randle Cotgrave, in 1611, translated as "arch-frequenters of the Abbeypot") will be able to remember that series of Baring sales in 1893 when the market was surprised to see a parcel-gilt cup of 1656 bring as much as 250s. an oz. Yet, by the whirligig of time, another Baring parcel-gilt piece—a 1576 tazza—caused Mr. Permain to perform the arithmetical feat of bidding up to 2400s. an oz. on July 17, 1929, in Lord Revelstoke's sale. Now this "per-ounce" bidding has its defects when generally applied as a means of comparison. The Swaythling cup, for example, would have yielded an ounce value of about £590 if this method of auction-bidding had been adopted. On the other hand, it is a rough-and-ready test, and it affords a good criterion of advancing prices.

That the craze for old silver is no new desire is proved by reference to Pliny who, as a philosopher, affected to deplore, over eighteen centuries ago, that "nowadays we value wrought silver only for its age." Anticipating me as a chronicler of art sales, he mentioned that a small cup by Pytheas had been sold for the equivalent of £175 an oz., and that a pair of cups by Zopyros had brought £10,500. Our "per-ounce" bidding, therefore, has a bit further to go before Greek or Roman sale records are exceeded.

In the previous report I touched upon the outstanding instances of these "per-ounce" results, and gave a list of those which had occurred at Christie's in the past, when 1000s. an oz. had been attained. As on two other occasions in 1929 this auction feat was exceeded, it seems desirable that this list should be extended and given for future serviceable reference. The complete record thus far is therefore as follows:

| Year | Piece | Sale | Price per oz. | Buyer |
|-------|---|---------------------|--------------------|----------------|
| | Salt-cellar, Charles I, plain, 1635 HD. | Мау 10 | 1320s. (£66) | Letts |
| ., 0 | Inkstand, Charles I, 1630 WR. | June 8 | 1600s. (£80) | Crichton |
| | Cup, Commonwealth, 1654 M. | Valpy | 1320s. (£66) | Heigham |
| | Beaker, Elizabethan, 1576 IR. | Tipping | 1060s. (£53) | Crichton |
| | Mug, Elizabethan, 1598 IB. | June 19 | 1560s. (£78) | Crichton |
| | Goblet, James I, 1619 RG. | June 12 | 1200s. (£,60) | Comvns |
| | Bell Salt-cellar, silver- gilt, Elizabethan, 1590. | Leverton- Harris | 1000s. (£50) | Willson |

The pleasurable duties of the table were often recalled by hospitable services and vessels of good cheer. Silver dinner services appeared on four occasions, and proved that the taste in the United States for such has increased their value much beyond former melting-pot prices. The late Marquis of Lincolnshire's service brought £,4,578 on December 4, 1928, a sale which heralded the influx of many famous collections. The Erle-Drax service realized £3,667 in February, Lord Brownlow's £5,330 in March, and the Earl of Ranfurly's £3,284 in July. It was also a great year for porringers—those two-handled vessels which succeeded the earlier caudle-cups and posset-cups in table equipment and decoration. On June 13 the Merchant Taylors Company had to pay 820s. an oz. in order to retrieve a porringer which had been presented to their affiliated branch at Oxford in 1667. Altogether fifteen porringers of first-class importance were sold; the lead being given when Mr. Lionel Crichton gave 620s. an oz. for a 1654 silver-gilt example on January 23. The silver splendours of the year were reflected by three wonderful loan exhibitions at Lansdowne House, Park Lane (Sir Philip Sassoon's house), and Seaford House; and many of the treasures which afterwards appeared at Christie's in the Brownlow, Astley, Bethell, and Philipson collections had been seen there. These loan displays, however, mercifully proved that there are still many tons of silver trophies left in this country.

After selling £35,000 worth of old silver on March 13 Lord Brownlow had the satisfaction of knowing that his descendants would have much more "to play with." Yet I know that it was a wrench to part with heirlooms engraved with the arms of every branch of his family, such as the £4,700 six silver-gilt tazze by Benjamin Pyne, 1698; the £4,200 pair of silver-gilt ewers by Simon Pantin, 1715; the £2,000 Charles II toilet-service; and that historic £1,800 relic of Boston Corporation silver—the townmace in the appropriate form of an oar.

Most of the "gold plate" in the world is really silver-gilt, but in the Bethell sale there was a real gold cup, the gift of Queen Anne in 1708 to a Yorkshire race-meeting, which had been shown side by side at the Park Lane display with that other rare gold trophy, owned by Mrs. Leopold de Rothschild, and won by Legacy at Newmarket in 1736. Made by the famous smith, Lewis Mettayer, this trophy was bought by Mr. S. J. Phillips at the maximum price of the season, £5,000. It is interesting to add that, if this cup had been offered to ounce bidding, it would have yielded 2000s. an This Bethell sale served the purpose also of bringing into prominence, for the first time, the importance of racing cups of early date. Generally these are of comparatively modern silver and fetch meagre sums, but the Kiplingcoates cup, made by W. Busfield of York in 1701, realized £788 11s. at 420s. an oz. As a bit of a hardened sinner I regretted, on December 12, 1928, that a really wonderful cock-fighting cup was appraised at only 12s. 6d. an oz. because the silver was only of 1858. Yet it bore the triumphant inscription:

"At the Pastures in Edgworth, Lancashire, a Welsh Main of Sixteen Cocks was fought on the 1st April 1858, and was won by Capt. Robert Townley Parker's Brown-Breasted RED WEDNESBURY."

The Bethell sale contained also a 1598 silver-gilt spice-box, for which Messrs. Mallett gave 1270s. an oz.; and this reminds me that sweetmeat-boxes, dishes, and stands were keenly coveted, and brought very high prices, 750s., 710s., and 800s. an oz. being achieved respectively for such; the last-named valuation being the Goldsmiths and Silversmiths Company's bid for a 1655 stand on May 1. Salt-cellars, too, were remarkable, and a pair of plain Charles II circular trenchers induced Mr. S. J. Phillips to go to 1800s. an oz. on June 13. These were in the collection of the late Sydney Morse, who was chairman of the Red Cross silver committee in the memorable sales between 1915 and 1918. He owned also a 1570 chalice made by Lawrence Stratford of Dorchester, whose communion cups and patens are preserved in many old churches in Dorset. But it is quite twenty years since a Dorchester vessel was sold at auction, and Mr. Lionel Crichton had to pay 570s. an oz. for this chalice.

Another striking event was the sale of the small, historic Saffron Walden mazer-bowl which had been at the King Edward VI Almshouses since it was made in 1507. When the late Sir Charles Jackson examined this mazer-bowl, which was then being used as a ballot-dish, he found it cracked in two places and that the circular plate of silver-gilt engraved with the Virgin and Child was secured to the bowl by the "clumsy fastening" of an iron nail driven through the middle. The silver-gilt band, too, often an ornate decoration to a mazer, was perfectly plain. The bowl, however, had derived much enhanced interest from the fact that Pepys had drunk a "draft" from it on February 27, 1659, before leaving to kiss the pretty wench at the village inn. There had been so much public discussion about the fate of this mazer that one has reasons for believing that one American competitor stayed his hand at the last moment. But in the end this Pepys relic realized the excellent sum of £2,900—£450 more than the much finer Braikenridge mazer brought in 1908. I do not know for certain where Pepys's own mazer reposes (out of which he drank a Christmas draught in 1666), but the very noble 1661 porringer which he possessed should be still in the collection of the Cockerell family.

London hall-mark, 1507; maker's mark, a fleur-de-lys.

The mazer is formed as a shallow bowl, of polished maple-wood, with a slight foot of the wood beneath the centre; it is mounted with a plain silvergilt rim, while in the centre of the bowl is a silver-gilt boss or medallion, $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. diam., engraved with the Virgin and Child, depicting the Virgin standing, wearing a crown and flowing robes and holding the Infant Saviour on her right arm, the two figures being shown on a rayed background.

Purchased by P. Oliver, Esq.

The Mazer Bowl has remained in the possession of the Almshouses from the time of its original gift until the present day, and it is of interest to recall that the Diarist Samuel Pepys, in describing his visit to Saffron Walden, in 1659, mentions the Mazer Bowl.

The Mazer Bowl is mentioned in an inventory of 1524, where it is recorded that there was "in the Botre [buttery] a masyr wt sylver and gylt."

The Mazer Bowl is mentioned in The History of Audley End and Parish of Saffron Walden, by Richard Lord Braybrooke, 1836.

PORCELAIN AND POTTERY

By A. C. R. CARTER

VERY admirer of beautiful and rare porcelain was heartened in the past season by the reappearance at Christie's of many covetable examples, as the strange absence of fine collections from the market in the previous year had been a disappointment to those who remembered the famous dispersals in the past. My chronicles of art sales teem with the records of the auction triumphs of porcelain, and although many greater events are included in these records I always remember that remarkable scene at Christie's in the Louis Huth sale, twenty-four years ago, when a prunus vase, which had once been bought for twelve shillings and sixpence in Wardour Street, actually fetched £5,900, some time afterwards joining the Pierpont Morgan collection. Apart from the beauty of Chinese porcelain there is a symbolism which, in the dark days of neglect, was little understood in Europe. The great Kitchener derived an endless fascination in probing the meaning of this symbolism and, even on his last night in London, before departing on his fatal voyage, he asked Mr. Frank Partridge to come over and have a chat with him about Chinese porcelain, especially concerning an approaching sale at Christie's in which there was a bowl enamelled with the figures of The Eight Immortals. Kitchener had gone down when this Kennedy sale ensued, but Mr. Partridge remembered the great soldier's interest, and bought the bowl as a gift to the London Museum, in piam memoriam.

I hope that some of my readers will derive the impression that my duties as an art chronicler have always been congenial and full of happy memories. Sometimes a friend will mention something which I wrote long ago that especially appealed to him, and, while I was engaged on this report, an old associate said to me: "Do you remember what you said about that ginger-jar in the Huth sale of 1905?"

As at times others have asked me a similar question, I may be pardoned for reprinting it in this second Christie's report:

On a fair spring day, many years ago, a rich mandarin sent a gift to his beloved. The frail blackthorn blossom was falling on the waters, and as the breaking ice came down the mountain stream it provided tiny barges for the tender sprays. And when the people espied the delicate prunusbloom they knew the season had come for wishing their friends long and hopeful years. So all gave gifts, but the mandarin's was the richest of them all. For months an artist had laboured in delight over the fashioning and glazing of a jar. On its vibrating ground of pellucid blue, pencilled over with a reticulation of darker blue lines, to represent the cracking of ice, he had traced the white blossoms and tiny buds of the wild prunus of Northern China, akin to the bloom of the blackthorn of our country hedgerows. And he knew his craft was true, and proudly took the labour of his hands to his master, the mandarin, who straightway filled the jar with dainty confections and sent it to his fair. Years afterwards the prosaic West supplied the bathos. The oviform vase was shipped to Europe. It became a "gingerjar," and was released from a crowded shelf of captives in a shop in Wardour Street on payment of the ransom of "twelve-and-six!"

Of such importance indeed was the series of porcelain sales in 1928-9 that a special section has to be given in this report to describe some of the very beautiful pieces offered. In Lord Crawford's inheritance from Lady Wantage was a superb garniture de cheminée, consisting of three Yung-Ching vases and a pair of beakers which Lord Overstone had bought in 1875 from the Ercolani Palace at Bologna—certainly not for "twelve-and-six" but for a moderate sum. Although the period of Yung-Ching ("King of the Potters") is generally associated with the production of egg-shell porcelain, the ceramic art of his immediate precursor. Kang-He, was continued, as these wonderful vases attested. Acting for a famous collector, Mr. Huggins paid 5,200 guineas for these Chinese trophies enamelled with vases of flowers in brilliant colours. A pair of Crawford Chinese cisterns of the Kien-Lung period, enamelled with Ho-Ho birds (those fabulous cranes which, when 600 years old, drink but no longer eat), realized 1,050 guineas.

Mr. Harry Simmons, who bought these, also won the famillerose pair at 1,350 guineas, which were in Princess Paley's Russian collection, and was prominent too in the dispersal of the Johnstone collection, which proved to be the chief Chinese porcelain sale of the season.

Although the owner of this fine array had suffered defeat in the General Election by the narrow majority of sixty-seven (in a contest where each opponent polled over 12,000 votes) he had no disappointment over his sale which, in totalling over £23,000, no doubt more than recouped him for his outlay on things of beauty which had given to him much æsthetic delight. The pleasures of possession are always imponderable. To receive a profit after enjoyment is surely an additional satisfaction. The fact is that the professional collectors are invariably ready to support the sale of a man's works of art when these are not only the "right stuff," but have been bought by a client. The pièce de résistance, for which Mr. Harry Simmons gave 3,600 guineas, was a famille-verte bowl decorated with wonderful flowering plants and birds on a black enamelled ground, with peonies and prunus branches in aubergine, green, and white, a triumph of Kang-He art which would have inspired Keats to compose a second "Ode." Another "joy for ever" was one of those "peach-blow" bottles of monochrome glaze with hundreds of subtle gradations. This little gem, $8\frac{1}{2}$ in. high, was won by Mr. Frank Partridge at 2,000 guineas.

If Lord Kitchener could have lived he would certainly have been present to witness the sale of the exceptionally fine figures of The Eight Immortals of the Kang-He period, as much as 121 in. high, because in his day he knew them to be the most striking set of these symbolic figures outside China. He would have bought them shortly after they had been brought to Europe by a Japanese collector—if he could have afforded the price. Mr. Partridge then secured them and they passed successively to the Gorer, Hosegood, and Du Cros collections before joining Mr. Johnstone's. As on each occasion of re-sale Mr. Partridge was the purchaser, and as he won them again in the Johnstone sale for 1,950 guineas, this makes the fifth time that he has been directly associated with them. These striking Taoist emblems include the fat figure of the earliest of the eight, Han Chung-Le, who discovered the elixir of immortality, and could revive the souls of the dead with his fan. Another fascinating figure is that of a lady-immortal, the beauteous Ho Seen-Ko who, to preserve her charms eternally, dieted herself on the powder of mother-o'-pearl, and also ate the celestial fruit of the peach tree growing near by the Lake of Gems. The detailed lists will show many other very interesting examples of Chinese porcelain sold in the past season and, among the Earl of Balfour's few things, was a pair of Kang-He mottled black and white figures of cats—animals of somewhat dubious omens—realizing 440 guineas.

The convulsions in Europe, according to the opinion of many, have caused the great collecting days of Sèvres and Dresden to pass away, and some avow that we shall never see again such a dispersal as the Schröder sale in 1910 when the present Sir Joseph Duveen gave 9,000 guineas for the Ledoux Sèvres garniture (which had fetched 2,650 guineas in the Dudley sale, 1886), and when Charles Wertheimer paid a similar sum for the Dodin and Le Guay vases which had brought 5,000 guineas in the Lyne-Stephens dispersal, 1895. There were, nevertheless, signs of reawakened interest last season. Quite early in the Marquis of Lincolnshire's sale a Sèvres dessert-service attained 1,000 guineas, and there was good bidding for Lord Brownlow's and the Princess Paley's pieces. Especial mention should be made also of a remarkable Dresden set of Watteau vases, with ormolu mounts, which realized 1,400 guineas in the Mrs. Mary Ann Parker sale, whose father was a partner with the renowned John Jones, celebrated in art chronicles as the benefactor to the present Victoria and Albert Museum.

OBJECTS OF ART, ARMOUR, BRONZES, AND STATUARY

OBJECTS OF ART, OBJECTS OF VERTU, MINIATURES, ARMOUR, STATUARY, AND ENGRAVINGS

By A. C. R. CARTER

T is doubtful whether the public at large ever exhibited more curiosity and expectation about the auction fate of a work of art than it evinced when it was announced in the spring that the Duke of Portland had decided to remove the Portland vase from the British Museum—where it had been on loan since 1810 and to have it offered for public sale on May 2 at Christie's. In the first place, many had forgotten, and more were unaware that the vase was not a State possession but private property, having been for so many years past at Bloomsbury since the fourth Duke lent it. And, despite the admiration that the vase had won among the lovers of archaic art after Sir William Hamilton had bought it out of the Barberini Palace, and after the eccentric Duchess of Portland had acquired it for her museum in 1785; and again, despite the eulogies which Wedgwood and others had bestowed upon its beauties, the public generally would have remained in ignorance about its merits unless a demented visitor to the British Museum in 1845 had not conferred "publicity" by smashing it into a hundred pieces.

The next "boom" for the Portland vase was the patient feat of a British craftsman—one Doubleday—who, after assembling the débris, contrived to piece together the fragments so that the cracks appeared only as minute capillaries. Henceforth the restored vase was a succès de curiosité. Moreover it must be borne in mind that the British workman has always been attracted to the British Museum, and it is greatly to his credit. If anybody doubts this assertion, let him be reminded of a speech in the House of Commons by Mr. Story-Maskelyne in 1884, who stated that, from personal observation, he had found that works of art of the highest class attracted visitors of the artisan class, who always scrutinized them with intelligence.

Now the restoration by a British craftsman of the Portland vase marked an epoch. Whatever alluring works of art there might be in the British Museum, here was one unquestionably associated with the ingenious skill of a British worker. Fathers took their sons to see "Old Bill's" triumph of repairing, and successive generations followed suit. "Where is that Portland vase?" was the first question put by hundreds of eager visitors on Bank Holidays.

So much for the very worthy popular aspect of the relic. How far would this view carry its value was a question frequently put, and really nobody could answer. The experts kept mum. They were in a dilemma. A judge of pictures knows that a canvas can be repaired without seriously affecting the value of a masterpiece. On the other hand, a collector of valuable porcelain looks askance at the finest specimen which—alas—has had to be put together again. The fate of the vase therefore depended on the momentum of all the previous réclame concerning it. Would this be sufficient to overcome the handicap of its being a cracked piece? More important still from a market point of view: would even enthusiastic bidding reach the reserve which, in the Duke of Portland's opinion, was the present value of a possession for which his ancestor had paid 980 guineas when the Duchess's museum was sold?

When Mr. Terence McKenna took his place in the rostrum on May 2 he was confronted by a company which showed that the Portland vase was a very public matter—even in the absence of a national subscription list. As usual, many knew which national benefactor should, or ought to, buy it on their behalf. I happen to know that a few "friends" were present, prepared to put down £20,000 to buy it for the nation. It was not to be. From the opening bid of £10,000, altered by a second to 10,000 guineas, the contest raced past 20,000 guineas with young M. René Seligmann attacking and being counter-attacked by another Paris dealer. At 27,000 guineas the latter had the lead, but he took his quietus when M. Seligmann waved a bid of 28,000 guineas. Then, for the first and last time, Mr. McKenna called the next advance, 29,000 guineas, from the book and, as this was not challenged, the alert auctioneer left the box. Such are the brief facts of an auction episode which will run the inevitable risk of being inaccurately remembered.

As there was not another Hawkins sale last year, the number and variety of objets d'art did not approach the record of 1927-8, yet on several occasions the market was provided with trifles of beauty, such as a Louis Quinze painted mother-o'-pearl fan with figures in gold (840 guineas), and a bonbonnière shaped as a monkey's head of agate with diamond eyes (350 guineas) in the Princess Paley's Russian collection. On March 14, in the Pitt-Rivers collection were eleven illuminations depicting scenes in the Life of Christ, extracted from a fifteenth-century French missal, for which Mr. Buttery gave as much as 3,200 guineas. Especially attractive, too, were various decorative French candelabra although clocks were less numerous, and the chief miniature was a Samuel Cooper man in the Brownlow sale, at 280 guineas. The Van Claes collection of armour sent from Germany to Christie's was another proof of London's ascendancy as the chief art clearing-house for the world's treasures. In this Mr. Fenton paid 1,200 guineas for a suit, cap-à-pie, of the German sixteenth-century Maximilian type, and a fifteenth-century Austrian breastplate made 720 guineas. Sculpture and statuary, too, were well exemplified in the Brauer collection, sent to Christie's from Nice. A copper-gilt figure of Christ, French, fourteenth century, realized 1,750 guineas, and a carved ivory group of the Virgin and Child, French, fifteenth century, 850 guineas. There were also several highly priced figures in wood, marble, and stone, and an Italian fifteenth-century terra-cotta relief of the bust of a girl brought as much as 1,800 guineas (Savile Gallery). I found also of much interest at the time two large stone groups which appeared in Princess Paley's collection, and one wondered how these weighty pieces of garden statuary had been conveyed out of Russia. Yet they once had to make the journey from Versailles to St. Petersburg, as these beautifully carved figures of cupids by A. Bizac had been made for the King's gardens in 1758. They will have to make another long journey as Mr. John Major, who bought them for 880 guineas, assured me that they would go to New York.

In that memorable spell of successful sales which occurred before Christmas last year, there was a dispersal of etchings and engravings which included two startling events. One of the most remarkable cults of our time is that of etchings by living British artists, which is keener than that in the last century for the translations of Meissonier's pictures or of Landseer engravings. The etchers themselves do not enjoy any enhanced profits, as they parted with their original works when they were published at a few guineas. On December 20 an etching of Ben Ledi, by Sir D. Y. Cameron, R.A. (who designed the cover for last year's report), brought the maximum sum of 500 guineas, and, as if to show that a hunting subject can lead the field, D. Niddery's engraving after Ben Marshall's portrait of the famous huntsman, Tom Oldaker, on his favourite mount Pickle, accompanied by that trusty pair of hounds, "Matchem" and "Ramper," realized 640 guineas.

It is a wise saying that the slang of one generation passes into the literature of the next. What despised and rejected things of today will be coveted by collectors to-morrow? Will they include our grandmothers' papier-mâché (inlaid with mother-o'-pearl) trays, blotting-pads, fans, and the like? Such a collection as this, belonging to the late Lady Macnaghten, received the hospitality of Christie's on March 26, but most of their clients "passed by on the other side." Yet who knows but that, in years to come, collectors will be striving to win the things which they once neglected? And then it may happen that they will wish to know the date of the Macnaghten sale.

FURNITURE, TAPESTRIES, CARPETS, RUGS, AND NEEDLE-WORK SALES

FURNITURE, TAPESTRIES, CARPETS, RUGS, AND NEEDLE-WORK SALES

By A. C. R. CARTER

O use a racing metaphor—the season did not take long to get into its stride. The zest of the furniture market was evinced early and, on November 22, a set of Hepplewhite chairs, which had been lying perdu in Guernsey since they had been bought from a firm of London upholsterers, many years ago, fetched 1,450 guineas. Soon followed that stirring quarter of a million sterling week at Christie's, for on December 5 (when the £188,000 jewel sale was held) the dispersal of the Marquis of Lincolnshire's furniture began, and helped with £37,000. The French pieces in this had been bought by the Lord Carrington who was in Paris during the early part of the nineteenth century. He then lived in the hotel of the renowned police agent Fouché, and, incidentally, purchased this worthy's Louis Seize secrétaire, which now fetched 840 guineas. One has not heard whether, in some secret drawer, any past incriminating papers have been discovered. It was, by the way, in such a piece of furniture, that the original of Nelson's Trafalgar Memorandum was found, which brought £3,600 at Christie's in 1906 and is now in the British Museum. But there were more important French examples such as a Louis XVI commode by Weisweiler at 2,000 guineas; a dainty Coste writing-table at 1,780 guineas; a Louis Quinze writing-table by R. V. Delacroix, 1,720 guineas; and a Louis Quinze writing-table, 1,280 guineas. The French dealers, such as M. Founés and M. Fabre, won many pieces but found Mr. Frank Partridge a doughty opponent. As it happened, the chief price, 2,600 guineas, was obtained for a pair of Chippendale mahogany writing-desks, the bid of the Kent Gallery. Two curios were Lady Carrington's old sedan-chair (130 guineas), and the old leather chair of the porter at Carrington House, Whitehall (120 guineas). Another relic was Dame Ellen Terry's cosy arm-chair which fetched 33 guineas on December 19.

The results of the sales of Lord Brownlow's Belton House silver and pictures have already been mentioned. When the furniture appeared, lovers of Queen Anne examples saw that the auction triumph last year when Earl Howe's console-table, mirror, and pair of torchères brought 10,100 guineas would be approached. This Belton suite was much enhanced by its coverings of tapestry, recognized by the experts as made by old Bradshaw of Fulham. When the bidding mounted up to 8,000 guineas, the continental dealers were aghast at the fervour of Mr. Frank Partridge and others for our once-despised English furniture. By comparison, Chippendale furniture was not so prominent, but Mr. Moss Harris gave 2,800 guineas for a dozen chairs sent from an old house in Yorkshire, and as much as 1,000 guineas was paid by Mr. Harry Simmons for two small commodes, only 30 in. wide, which used to be at Givons near Dorking. The chief Sheraton pieces of the year, another pair of commodes, also attained a similar price.

Last year there was a comparative dearth of French furniture, but the Lincolnshire examples, already noticed, were followed by a goodly series of dispersals in which many fine pieces were offered, notably in Viscount d'Abernon's collection from Esher Place. This sale had a personal association worthy of record here. Owing to his absence from England, Sir Joseph Duveen had not been able to attend a sale at Christie's for some years past. Being, however, a close friend of Lord d'Abernon, and wishful to promote the success of the sale, he made a point of being present throughout as an ardent amicus curiae. His presence—and lively intervention—exercised a marked effect on the proceedings, especially on the French dealers who seemed to feel an extra goad from the competition of an old foe. Nearly £40,000 was realized, the chief example being a Louis Quatorze suite, covered with Beauvais tapestry, won by M. Fabre at 2,150 guineas. Ten Louis tables, too, averaged nearly 600 guineas and, as in the instance of the D'Abernon pictures, a pronounced profit accrued.

A series of interesting sales ensued from the arrival at Christie's of various treasures belonging originally to the Grand Duke Paul of Russia, uncle of the late Tsar, and housed at Tsarskoye Selo, associated since with Lenin. By arrangement with an international syndicate, the Princess Paley, the widow, permitted these sales. The success of the pictures has been described. Among the French furniture was a Louis Quinze Beauvais suite realizing 2,720 guineas (Mr. M. Harris), and a pair of commodes at 1,400 guineas. There were other highly-priced lots, and a touch of poignant history was the harpsichord once in the apartments of Marie Antoinette in the Petit Trianon. Whenever a musical instrument appears at Christie's I am reminded of a well accredited story that, æons ago, a grand piano "slipped through" at the one and only bid of one guinea. The harpsichord, however, brought 480 guineas.

The Holford Italian furniture sold in 1927 proved the great value of noble cassoni, and any fine examples are always bound to be highly appraised. When, therefore, a Florentine fifteenth-century cassone, which had once belonged to Sir Henry Layard, was offered, the market was on the qui vive, and the chest which had a Queen of Sheba panel, painted in the style of Paolo Uccello, reached 1,950 guineas. But this sum was much exceeded in the sale of the Godfroy Brauer collection, dispatched to Christie's from Nice. This specimen did not contain a painted panel, but relied on its bold and dignified carving for its stately decorativeness, and Mr. Langton Douglas bought the superb example at 4,400 guineas.

The tapestries appearing at Christie's during the year were especially noteworthy, and in this Brauer collection was a sixteenthcentury French panel, woven with the graceful shapes of birds moving among countless flowers, which obviously attracted the continental dealers. Although Mr. Alec Martin put up a stout fight on behalf of an English private collector he had to give way to M. Bacri at 7,000 guineas. On the day of the sale of the Brownlow furniture some of the Earl of Crawford's possessions, inherited from Lady Wantage, were offered. The beautiful Chinese porcelain has already been treated. Here should be mentioned the magnificent Brussels panels, signed by Borght and A. Castro, woven with lively scenes of occupations of farmers, sportsmen, and fishermen after the spirited designs by David Teniers. When the seven hangings were displayed on the view-days they created much admiration. Despite the efforts of the Paris dealers, Mr. Harry Simmons of New York succeeded in winning the first set of four panels at 6,200 guineas, and the second set of three at 3,000 guineas. On June 12, too, he gave 3,350 guineas for a single Gobelin panel, signed by Cozette in 1766, and woven with a scene from Orlando Furioso. This had been sent for sale by a clergyman living in Norfolk. Other very decorative tapestries included examples of English craft, among which was an exceptionally important set of four panels ascribed to John Vanderbank, and inspired by the designs of that seventeenth-century pontiff of taste in decoration, Jean Berain, "dessinateur de la chambre et du cabinet du Roi" in the days of Louis Quatorze. The gayest of schemes was evolved by the interspersion of nymphs, cupids, birds, animals, festoons, roses, and garlands against a background of classical architecture, and Mr. L. Harris had to overcome much foreign competition to win the set at 3,700 guineas, which came from the Earl of Yarborough's house at Arlington Street. This professional collector gave also 3,900 guineas for a set of five Borght Brussels panels, illustrating the story of Achilles, on July 30.

Although Kipling has declared the event to be impossible— EAST and WEST do meet; the occasion being any carpet sale at Christie's. I shall not forget an early instance of this, seventeen years ago, when all the bazaars seemed to have been emptied to provide the throng which crowded to King Street, in the John Edward Taylor sale, in the hope of "picking up" a Persian prayer-rug when the "West was not looking." But the Duveens knew all about it, and their winning bid of 5,000 guineas was made in a veritable Babel. There was no Eastern carpet to equal this last season, much less to approach the 22,000 guineas for the "Emperor's Carpet" in the previous season, or the 13,000 guineas for the two prayer-rugs in 1919, which had been kept for many years rolled up under the Marchioness of Graham's big dining-room table. During the year, however, eleven topped 300 guineas each, and in the Benson sale the final bid for a North-west Persian example was 1,250 guineas. Later, in the D'Abernon dispersal, a large Ispahan carpet was bought for 1,550 guineas by the Paris dealer, M. Tabbagh.

A very noteworthy phase of modern collecting is the increase of interest—and value—of old English needlework and, as usual, the lead has been given by gifted amateurs. In many great houses there are relics of this beautiful craft, often executed by noble sempstresses skilled in taste and design, and at several important loan exhibitions some very exquisite examples were shown, proving that the art of the famous days of the Opus Anglicanum had been inherited. In addition to possessing some valuable old silver, Mrs. Philipson owned three panels of Elizabethan needlework, worked with allegorical subjects and landscape backgrounds, in coloured silks. On May 2 these beautiful panels realized 1,100 guineas (Mallett).

SOME INFORMATION ABOUT CHRISTIE'S

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE

It has often been suggested that selling Objects of Art at Christie's involves the vendor in considerable expense. We trust the following information will dispel this erroneous idea.

In the first place, we give our advice free of charge to anyone who may bring their property to our rooms with a view to subsequent sale.

Secondly, all expense incurred by cataloguing, announcement of sales, and the advertising of property is borne by our firm.

Thirdly, the commission charged by Christie's is no more than that charged by other established firms of Fine Art auctioneers in London and is, in fact, less than many of them.

Fourthly, in cases where we make a valuation for probate, our usual custom is to remit our fees in the event of a sale subsequently being held by us. Thereby a considerable saving to the estate is effected.

By selling at Christie's our clients reap the benefit of our experience which has been gained over a period of more than a century and a half, and in addition secure the advantage of having their property exhibited to the largest circle of Art Collectors that is to be found in any auction room in the World.

Our terms for selling are clearly laid out overleaf.

TERMS OF SALE

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON, AND WOODS beg to state that:

I. The Commission on the sale of Pictures and Works of Art offered at auction in their rooms is $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

The Commission charged includes all expenses of sale, except carriage and insurance. Messrs. Christie can arrange for the carriage and insurance if so desired.

2. Exception to the above is only made in the case of Books, Manuscripts, Lace, Coins, Medals, and ancient Greek, Roman, or other Antiquities or Relics, when the commission charged is $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and in the case of sales at Private Houses or in the Country when the Commission charged is 10 per cent.

- 3. The Commission on Property bought-in is 5 per cent. on each Lot up to £100, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on each Lot exceeding £100, on the sums actually bidden at the sale.
- 4. It is desirable that a list with every information necessary to be given should accompany Property sent for sale, and owners are recommended to insure their Property, Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods not being responsible for loss or damage by fire. Messrs. Christie are very pleased to arrange insurance of Property on their premises and this can be effected against all risks at a very small premium.
- 5. Property sent to Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods for their inspection will be received and (if not kept for sale) will be returned entirely at the risk and expense of the owners and will be insured only if special directions are given by the owners and the cost of the insurance remitted with such directions.
- 6. The inclusion in or exclusion from and the description of each Lot in the Sale Catalogue shall be absolutely in the discretion of Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, who will incur no responsibility in respect thereof nor in respect of any advice they may give in reference to the sale.

TERMS FOR VALUATIONS

I. PROBATE.

The usual charge for making Valuations for Probate is $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the first £100, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the residue.

In the event of Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods making a Valuation and the Property being subsequently sold by them within twelve months, Messrs. Christie are pleased to remit the charge made for the Valuation on the whole or any portion which they may sell.

2. INSURANCE.

The usual charge for Valuations for Insurance is $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the total value of the Property.

In the case of Valuations for Insurance the owner may prefer to settle a fixed fee beforehand instead of one based on a percentage. Messrs. Christie are always pleased to make an arrangement of this kind if desired.

3. SPECIAL VALUATIONS.

In the case of Valuations for special purposes such as Family Division, etc., Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods are always pleased to quote a reasonable fee based on the work entailed, the time involved, and the value of the Property in question.

INSPECTIONS

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON, AND WOODS are pleased to arrange the inspection of Collections and Properties which it is proposed to offer for sale at auction, in London or in the Country, and to advise their Clients regarding their disposal, for a small fee, plus the out-of-pocket expenses of the journey.

CATALOGUES

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON, AND WOODS beg respectfully to give notice that they are pleased to post regularly on publication all plain catalogues of their sales at an annual subscription of one guinea.

Plain Catalogues of special sales may be had in a similar manner at the undermentioned subscriptions (maximum one guinea):
